It is widely acknowledged that many organisational change initiatives neither result in their intended aims, nor foster sustained change. While there is no official statistic some estimate that up to two-thirds of change projects fail. Increasingly researchers suggest that there are a number of central areas that are underestimated in the change process, including the role of leadership, trust, communication and positive organisational development strategies, that aid pre and post change climates.

In this workshop we will discuss advances in organisational development and change. The workshop will examine proactive and positive approaches to change and development. The session will cover leading change, enhancing commitment to change and development, and advances in positive organisational change. The workshop will focus on research developments in these areas, clarify approaches, and aid strategies for change leaders.

The workshop is designed for I/O Practitioners who wish to ensure their knowledge in the area of Change Management is up to date and will involve reflection and discussion on current research developments and participants experiences of change and development.

Dr. Maree Roche

Maree is a Senior Lecturer in Industrial and Organisational Psychology at the University of Waikato. She lectures in Leading Change and Development and Advances in Organisational Psychology. She has a number of years consulting and research experience in the area of leadership, organisational development and positive organisational strategies. Her primary areas of research and consulting include positive leadership, positive organisational psychology and its relationship to organisational development and change.
