In exchange we offer a supportive and collegial environment and a wide range of involvement and influence in the direction of the counselling services across the university. As part of a broader health service, the student counselling service collaborates extensively with other teams and other professionals and academic staff across the campus as well as on other campuses.

- Tertiary qualification (ideally at a post-graduate level) in a relevant field such as health and mental health, counselling, psychology, or social work
- A good understanding of Te Tiriti o Waitangi

You will be expected to carry a small clinical load, provide guidance and supervision to colleagues, and to participate in shaping the Massey University counselling services generally. You will also contribute to the broader university decision making where appropriate.
